Newsroom REPORT: Ingenuity to San Francisco Turns into California's First Taco Truck Tuesday, August 20, 2012 August 20, 2012 The first Taco Truck, San Francisco, made its debut in the city's Mission District, Aug. 14. The truck hails from Ingenuity Mobile Technologies, a company that develops, licenses and markets innovative mobile business solutions and services, and whose slogan is "Empowering entrepreneurs." In this case, the enterprise is a mobile retail outlet that sells taco, burrito, quesadilla, nachos, tostadas and more, from inside the truck. This operation, as expected, is pretty innovative. Ingenuity's first Taco Truck model hails from the "hybrid space"; it's a regular taco truck with special features that include a cooler, printer, hot dog cooker, garbage disposal, an indoor bathroom, a cleaning service and more. As for the truck's financing, Ingenuity has the two largest U.S. lenders – Bank of America and Wells Fargo – in its corner. To a certain extent, the truck is less about catering to some Hispanic special-interest group in San Francisco, and more about creating a mobile retail outlet in the city that can (at least some of the time) sell a real taco, burrito or quesadilla. This underscores an interesting development in the city: San Francisco is not alone. Since the recession, more and more Americans are using their mobile phones to shop and eat out, at least part-time. Last year, Citi released a

I want to create an app that shares content. For example, if I'm at home, I would like to be able to download some content on my phone from the app that's being used at home (e.g. books) and if I'm at work, I would like to be able to download some other content on my phone from the app that's being used at work (e.g. my work schedule). I've looked at Google Drive and Dropbox, but am wondering if there is a simpler solution. A: Google Drive would be a reasonable solution. Your app would need to use the Drive API for authentication and authorization.
