This article was published 19/10/2018 (350 days ago), so information in it may no longer be current. Tyson Moats was eight years old when he stood next to his father and watched the Winnipeg Blue Bombers play the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. It was 1960 and the Blue Bombers were trying to build their dynasty. While they came up short, the team's success over the next decade or so was a major factor in the growth of the city's CFL franchise. Moorhead (Winnipeg) was 30 years old in 2016, the year that Winnipeg's CFL franchise was awarded. He's now 66 and this week will get to share his memories of Blue Bombers football with his eight-year-old grandson. "It was great, I got to go to the games," Moorhead said of his first experiences as a Blue Bombers fan. "I'll tell you this, when the stadium first opened, I stood right next to the edge of the stadium, I was eight years old, and I watched them play the Hamilton Tiger-Cats for the first time." Moorhead said while there wasn't much playing space on the field, the atmosphere at Empire Stadium and surrounding neighbourhoods was electric. "It was just a great time, I can tell you that," he said. "I was standing there with my dad and he said, 'What did you think of that?' I said, 'I thought it was terrific.' It was a long time ago, you can't just tell somebody what it was like then." After having dinner with Moorhead, who said he's 2d92ce491b
