Here is the whole story : I have an old USB flash memory card (hardware's file system) that contains thousands of images/photos. Now, I want to make a small software that let me browse these photos, and let me upload or delete one of them. I don't have the sourcecode for the old USB flash memory, and for sure I don't have the software that were used to create the flash memory (and even less I have a license for such software). So, I'm forced to use a C#.NET developer system with a Win32 COM application. Here is what I've done so far : With a C#/.NET developer system (without access to the sourcecode of the original software), I've create a COM (.tlb) file that expose an Object called soNoFlashCamera, that are described as follow :

/ * * soNoFlashCamera -
CLSID_CNoFlashCamera * */ [ComVisible(true)] [Guid("0726f834-b83
9-41c6-8f2b-4f4f2cc39d8d")] [Interface Type(ComInterfaceType.InterfaceIsUnk nown)] [ProgId("soNoFlashCamera.CNo FlashCamera")] public interface ICNoFlashCamera { int getCardSize(); int upload(string path, byte[] data); int delete(string path); int view(string path);

---

int browse(); int deleteAll(); } and then I've written a C# program that use the COM (.tlb) file to create a new soNoFlashCamera object and call a function named "browse", that create a new file 09e8f5149f
