Report view user4694983 said: Works OK,but not completely Rating: -1 (1 votes) Can you use this with a newer Windows, and can't wait to start helping people again! The help file opening and closing functions are slow to respond - but sometimes not responding at all. The help cursor doesn't move at all (it's stuck in the middle of the window). The arrow to control the help cursor doesn't work if you click and drag a cursor. (It's impossible to use the arrow keys, or press the left & right arrow keys to control the help cursor). The positioning of the help cursor is an absolute position, it does not move with the scrollbar - this makes it impossible to use the scrollbar to position the help cursor. (We had to use a 3rd party control for this). It's not possible to open an external help file from within the app. It's not possible to convert the help file to a Microsoft Help database - this means you can't easily build help files using the Microsoft Builder tool. It's not possible to use the "Design Editor" to rearrange the HTML files that make up the help system. The help file in the app doesn't open when you click the help file icon in the Help System panel. It's not possible to import a help file from another app. The app's Help System doesn't contain a valid html title

Microsoft HTML Help Workshop (available for Microsoft Windows) Summary The Microsoft HTML Help Workshop allows you to generate an entire Help System for your application (or any other project). You can use the tool to create Help Files (.chm) which can be used with Microsoft's Visual C++ 6.0 to create an extensive and effective Help System. If you are already familiar with creating this type of file then you are probably better off using a specialized tool like HTML HelpWizard. HTML HelpWizard is a software development tool that assists you in creating a Help System for your application that is based on a set of HTML files. These files can be compiled into a .chm file using Microsoft's HTML Help Workshop. HTML HelpWizard provides an environment that allows you to easily create and organize the HTML files used to create your Help System. The application aids you in organizing the individual Help Topics into a logical hierarchical structure. Based on this Help Topic structure, it can then automatically generate the Help Topic navigation to the level you specify. With the Topic organization and Help System navigation headaches behind you, you can concentrate on the details of writing the actual Help Topic contents. If you are involved with software development, you know how important a good Help System is to a project's success.
