What's New in the Log File Merger?

Log File Merger is a program that can be used to combine multiple log files into one. Description: You can also edit the "Exclude filter" line to search through only certain kinds of log files. And you can customize the sort order by clicking the Up and Down arrows on the sorting column. Description: Some programs will list the full path to the log file on the header of the file. Description: a) Moving a web server off of the network: This can be done in at least 3 ways. *2) By moving the existing configuration files to another server. *3) By moving the web directory to another server, while maintaining all current URLs. *4) By moving the existing configuration files to another server, while preserving the URL configuration. *5) By moving the existing log files to another server, while preserving the WebLog and the message log. The moving of the existing log files to another server is probably the easiest of the options. b) Moving a web server off of the network Description: IIS 7 is the web server that serves the Internet and other web sites on a computer. In this version of IIS, the web server logs requests for pages into the file "WebLog.log" and stores details of failed requests in "Errors.log". Description: The error log is also available as a HTML file and can be viewed with a browser. The error log is located at the following location: C:\Program Files\Common Files\Microsoft Shared\Web Server Extensions\12\LOGS Description: Apache is the most popular web server for the Internet. It is installed on most of the computers connected to the Internet. Apache stores the information that a user sends to the web server, such as the user's browser and IP address, in the file "access.log". The access.log file stores the details of the request the user sends to the web server. Description: The email log of an account is stored in the "%username_com.mail" subfolder.
