Sándor Balogh Sándor Balogh (13 September 1910 – 16 November 1992) was a Hungarian politician, who served as Minister of the Interior between 1976 and 1981. Balogh was born in Győr into an ethnic German family and attended the vocational high school there. During the late 1920s he was a member of the Hungarian Communist Party. In 1933 Balogh was sentenced to six months' imprisonment by the Hungarian Great Assembly for transgressing the membership regulation. Balogh was dismissed from his municipal clerk's post due to his activities in the Communist Party. Between 1939 and 1944, Balogh was imprisoned for anti-Nazi activities. In 1953 he was elected to parliament representing a Communist faction. Balogh became the interior minister after the 1956 Soviet invasion of Hungary. In 1968, he was sent by the Communist Party to Czechoslovakia and met with the then-crown-prince of Bohemia to negotiate with him.

Balogh was released from prison in 1971. As Minister of the Interior, Balogh oversaw the framework of the constitution of 1980. In 1980 Balogh became the head of the Central Committee of the Hungarian Socialist Workers' Party. However, by 1989 he had become disenchanted with the communist dictatorship, and he left the party. Later that year he founded the Democratic Coalition, a party composed of various old dissident groups and, in particular, members of the Hungarian Democratic Forum. Balogh was part of the "Council of Regional Leaders of Opposition" that represented the opposition parties in the National Assembly. He was sworn in as Prime Minister of Hungary on 7

August 1989. Balogh was a representative of the Hungarian Soviet Republic in the Consultative Assembly of the Soviet Union. What's New in the?

Books, magazines, CDs and videos that inspired this blog's content… Monday, February 22, 2017 Keep on Trying Keep on Trying NEW BOOK BY MARY POOLE REVIEWED BY KORU PEOPLES Editing and design: Martin Laws This book was a very exciting one to review, not just for the story and the characters but for the audience that's been waiting for this book since it started on Net Galley. The narrator is based on a true person and the author has worked with that person to bring the story to life. I had the pleasure of watching the author on This American Life a few times and she's really down to earth and real, which is what makes this book so great. This is the story of Susan Buron-Dersch, an orphan who found herself unwillingly in the foster care system. She was placed with a couple who used to own a toy store and soon she was on her way to opening her very own toy store. This situation would change when Susan's new foster brother starts teaching her some lessons about the world. This set Susan on a journey of self discovery and independence that she's been craving since she was a little girl, having been passed from family to family since birth. When she finds a way to escape her foster care situation she runs away leaving her homeless and friendless but at the same time she's experiencing things that are rare in a fifteen year old girl's life – peace, time to think, time to be herself, time to make mistakes, learn from mistakes, and to keep moving on. At least that's what this teen looks like on the outside when she's beginning to explore who she wants to become but this is just a small glimpse at the real Susan Buron-Dersch – this girl has found herself and isn't going to let anyone or anything get in her way. When Susan finds out her foster parents were not legally allowed to adopt her she decides to run away again and this time she manages to join a teenage off-shoot of the Children's Home Society, which is a couple of years before the agency eventually would be closed down. Susan is a willing participant in her
