Field of the Invention The present invention relates to heat dissipation devices and more particularly pertains to a self-regulating heat dissipation device which is vertically oriented. 2. Description of the Prior Art The use of heat dissipation devices is known in the prior art. More specifically, heat dissipation devices heretofore devised and utilized are known to consist basically of familiar, expected and obvious structural configurations, notwithstanding the myriad of designs encompassed by the crowded prior art which have been developed for the fulfillment of countless objectives and requirements. Known prior art includes U.S. Pat. No. 3,976,845; U.S. Pat. No. 4,898,331; U.S. Pat. No. 5,322,402; U.S. Pat. No. 3,830,479; U.S. Pat. No. 5,550,322; and U.S. Pat. No. Des. 309,092. While these devices fulfill their respective, particular objectives and requirements, the aforementioned patents do not disclose a self-regulating heat dissipation device which includes a housing having a base with inner and outer walls which form a cavity therein, a plurality of spaced apart fins extending upwardly from the base, a trough member disposed within the housing in communication with the cavity, a motor disposed within the housing and being disposed between the inner and outer walls of the base, and a coil attached to an armature shaft of the motor, the shaft being coupled to a pump for pumping a fluid through the trough member and through a plurality of spaced apart holes in the fins to remove heat from the housing through the fins. In these respects, the self-regulating heat dissipation device according to the present invention substantially departs
